There is a Difference

Scott's Emulsion is the original Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and has been the world's standard for 35 years.

There are thousands of so-called Emulsions, but they are cheap, worthless imitations and never half as good as the standard. They are like thin milk.

Scott's Emulsion

Is like thick, rich cream. It is a concentrated food-medicine of the most beneficial sort. You can make it thin with milk or water, but don't buy the thin, worthless imitations.

ALLOS IS BRANDED AS A BRIBE-TAKER

Exchange. He did not refer specifically to scandals at Albany at any time during his speech, but when he had concluded, he was asked for expression on the Allos decision of today. To this he replied, paraphrasing his address:

"There must be the very fullest investigation, by all the proper means. The political household needs disinfecting, and we shall save money by making the process a thorough one," declared Governor Charles E. Hughes, of New York, to-night in an address at the banquet of the Merchants' Exchange in New Rochelle.

"Fullest inquiry by every competent means" into the charges of political corruption in New York State, were advocated by the Governor, who declared that he had no panacea, for prevention of future public ills of a similar nature, but declared anew his belief in the direct primary as a salutary measure for purging the political system.

Starting with the declaration that political corruption is not partisan, but the common enemy, Governor Hughes said:

"These are wholesome days for the people of this State, full of opportunity and promise. It is not when the pendulum is known, infected quarters ascertained, and every effort made to limit and eradicate, that we have reason to be alarmed, but rather when ignorance or indifference permit it to spread unchecked.

I am a Republican, strongly attached to my party, and earnest in the desire for Republican success. I cherish a concern deeper and more vital than that, I want to see the illicit efforts of privilege frustrated, bribery and corrupt arrangements destroyed, and the marked places where governmental favor has been bought and sold, converted into true assemblies of honest representatives of the people.

"Let there be the fullest inquiry by every competent means. It is not need to know those who have been faithful to their trust. It is needed to put an end to corrupt alliances between business and politics. It is needed to protect honest business."

"It is just to the honorable men in the Legislature, who should not be the victims of an indiscriminate denunciation by reason of practices in which they have no part."

"It is just to party organization, that it may be saved from the corrupt uses which have brought it into contempt."

"It is needed to show how and wherein the people have been deceived that they may protect themselves against deception in the future."

"It is necessary in order that remedial measures, whether in legislative rules or in statutes, should be adopted, so as to reduce to a minimum the opportunities for stealth and of efficiency in advancing or retarding legislative proposals."

"Whatever may be the result of such an inquiry, it is clear now, as it has been for a long time, that we should make a change in our methods of nominating candidates for elective offices. The revelations of the past few weeks have supplied fresh evidence of the defects of the present system, under which fraud and corruption have prospered."

RECALLS TRAGIC STORY

Death of Man Who First Dreamed of Great Queensboro Bridge

New York, March 29.—After years of obscurity, the death to-day of Dr. Thomas Rainey, at the age of eighty-five years, recalled to New Yorkers the tragic story of the failure of the first great bridge across the East River.

To the project of building a bridge across East River and Blackwell's Island, Dr. Rainey gave the best years of his life, and devoted his fortune of about $600,000, only to meet failure. He organized a company, and some preliminary work was done, but capital was scarce, and subsequently the city took up its own plan for the structure.

After the completion of the bridge last year, Dr. Rainey walked alone over the structure, feeble and bitter as he gazed at the realization of his plans by the work of others. He was a native of North Carolina, and was well-known as a surgeon and promoter of South American enterprises.

GENERAL ROSSER PASSES QUIETLY

Washington, down to Fredericksburg and Moss Neck.

Mrs. Rosser lived with her husband in winter quarters, 1863-'64, at Culpeper and Orange Courthouse, and frequently rode along the picket lines with him, sometimes riding forty miles a day.

His Business Career.

As soon as the war was over General Rosser went to Baltimore, where he had many army friends, and was employed by the city government as engineer, in which capacity he made a survey and plat of the harbor. Then he was in the service of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company as one of the sub-engineers in construction of its McConneville branch. From there he went to Minneapolis, Minn., where he was employed as rodman on the Northern Pacific. In a brief time he had risen from the lowest to the highest position, and became chief engineer of the Northern Pacific, and as such surveyed, located and constructed that transcontinental line. As soon as that work was finished he was placed in charge of the Canadian Pacific, and removed to Winnipeg, where he resided with his family while he was constructing that railroad to Puget Sound.

Having made a fortune in these two great works—for he was the only man that ever completed two such great works—he removed to Virginia, built his home at "Rugby Hall," just outside of Charlottesville, and devoted himself with the same intelligence and energy to the development of his native State as he did in the cause of the South in 1861-'65, and likewise constructing the two continental railroads in 1865-'75.

He was the projector, promoter and engineer of the Charleston, Cincinnati and Chicago Railroad Company.

His Family.

He had a charming family. His daughter, Beale Winston, married Charles Campbell Cochran, a grandson of General William Campbell, who commanded at the battle of King's Mountain; a son, Thomas L. Rosser, Jr., and Marguerite.

NOT HURT BY HAMBURGER

Further Developments in Alleged Poisoning of Alexander J. Moody. Chicago, March 29.—It developed to-day that the Hamburger steak, alleged to have contained arsenic, which proved fatal to Alexander J. Moody, was partaken of by another man without injurious effect.

According to Mrs. Moody, widow of the deceased, her husband ate the fatal breakfast on the night of Mr. Moody's death, and had eaten a small portion when interrupted by Frank Moody, who took the remainder and turned it over to Dr. F. S. Hartmann, the family physician. In this latter Dr. Walter Haines found much arsenic, but Dr. Haines said to have suffered no illness. The coroner said that he attached little importance to the story of Dr. Haines' experience, as probably was fortunate enough to have eaten a piece not impregnated with the poison.

Subpoenas to attend the inquest, scheduled for April 12, were issued to-day for Mrs. Moody and Peter Peterson, the latter a former employee, and later friend of the deceased. Peterson frequently occupied a room at the Moody home.

Disunity, weakness, internal contests down to 1897 had their sway; Austria and Prussia, the two strong states which had developed out of mediæval chaos, were in constant and bitter struggle. But the rise of a nationalism springing from the humiliation of Prussia during the period of Napoleon, and showing itself in a great educational, military and poetic revival, gradually got the victory. Bismarck, the forming genius of the German unity, taking advantage of this growing nationalism, drove Austria from the German Confederation, and finally, after defeating France in the bloody struggle of 1870, formed an empire in fact as well as in name.

Professor Meyer is a patriotic German. He gave a vigorous defense of the monarchy, the army system, the efficient bureaucracy, and attributed the peace of Europe to the power and peaceful intentions of the German Government.

For two hours he held the attention of the audience by his vigorous presentation of facts of sober history, showing that history told by skillful tongue is an enchanting story.

From Richmond Professor Meyer goes to Baltimore to lecture before the Johns Hopkins University. Yesterday he was the honored guest of the president of the college at a banquet at the Jefferson, where, among other distinguished citizens, were present Governor Mann, Lieutenant-Governor Elyson and Major J. BISMARCK'S WORK ABLY PICTURED Professor Meyer Describes How German Empire Became Powerful.

The second lecture on the Thomas Foundation, given by Professor Edward Meyer at Richmond College was delivered in the college chapel last evening. A large audience of many of the most intelligent people of the city was present to hear the famous Berlin professor's illuminating description of the formation of the great empire of which he is a distinguished citizen.

From the weakness of the old Holy Roman Empire of the Middle Ages, Professor Meyer showed how there had developed, under the strong impulse of necessity and patriotism and the iron hand of Bismarck, the great empire as it now is under Kaiser Wilhelm.

Disunity, weakness, internal contests down to 1897 had their sway; Austria and Prussia, the two strong states which had developed out of mediæval chaos, were in constant and bitter struggle. But the rise of a nationalism springing from the humiliation of Prussia during the period of Napoleon, and showing itself in a great educational, military and poetic revival, gradually got the victory. CARUSO UNDER GUARD.

Appears on Boston Streets With Detectives

Boston, March 29.—Constantly guarded by his secretary and three detectives for fear of "Black Hand" attempts on his life, Enrico Caruso, the tenor, who sang at the Boston Opera House last night, ventured outdoors from the Hotel Lenox yesterday, for a stroll about town.

It was thought that on account of the threats made against his life in New York after Brooklyn "Caruso would keep under guard as much as possible in Boston. But after breakfast yesterday he took a walk, and his bodyguard took the same walk, never leaving him for a second. Secretary Voghera and Detective Misanzo walked abreast of their high-salaried charge all the way. In the crowded downtown streets they were particularly vigilant.

"Caruso himself seemed as happy as though the 'Black Hand' had never been heard of. Asked how he felt about the threats made against him, he said: 'My previous visits to Boston have always been delightful. I always enjoy myself in Boston. To be sure, I come here this year under little different circumstances, as there are three members of the Italian contingent in the New York police department with me. This is a protection. I am sure no harm will befall me here.'

SELL TWELFTH NIGHT.

Horse With Famous Ancestry to Be Placed

Dr. L. D. Mills, of Newport News, reached the city yesterday afternoon, bringing with him his thoroughbred stallion, Twelfth Night, which will be offered for sale to-day at the Southern Stock Yards. Dr. Mills' reason for placing the horse on sale is that he has decided to close out his entire stable.

Twelfth Night, being twelve years of age, now too old to be used on the track, but is considered in his prime as a sire. No horse in the State has a longer line of ancestors. In the list are famous horses of the English turf and several Futurity winners. While he has never figured strongly on the track, he was marked at better than 1:40 several years ago.

MINT JULEP SEASON HERE TO MAKE OLD HEARTS GLAD

Sweeter Than Scent of Apple Blossoms, Fragrant Green Tempts Colonels to Discard Winter Garment of Repentance.

Sweeter than the scent of apple blossoms, the incomparable fragrance of the mint now revives under the tender touch of spring, which is the most joyous of all the seasons. Now majors and colonels who have worn the winter garment of repentance are rapidly tearing up that vestment, and hearkening to the call of the mint, which is: "Fill me with the old familiar juice, methinks I might recover by and by."

Full many a prohibitionist will now flout his "red badge of courage"—the ruby nose. Down in Danville, dear desert of drought, they have passed up the "precious stuff that the victors sell"—but the mint-laden spring has been too much, and "Dame Reason" has taken a back seat, while the mystic magic of the mint will muster to be polls those who are sick of platitudes and strong for "pain-killers." They could wait till mint-time, but no longer.

Any way, "a mint julep don't count." As the portly person who speaks of liquor as a "curse," said, "Why, huh, of course I take my julep. Suh, my grandfather took it far be it from me to depart from my family traditions." Now father will come late from the club, and give his money freely, with the grand air of John D. No well-regulated family will be without its mint-patch, and some admirer of Colonel Roosevelt should send him a small package of the "tender green" that fledges the river lip." A Kentucky general-of-Confederate veterans—sent him three gallons of thirty-eight-year-old Bourbon; now let somebody complete the symphony and supply the lost chord. There is no tariff on mint.

Dry-as-dust historians know little of the power of the rightly-made mint julep. It has settled senatorships; it has ended family feuds; it has struck the key of many a matchlessly eloquent speech; it has fired timid heart to win fair lady; it has been, it is, and it ever shall be the unanswerable argument against prohibition.

So long as the delicate green nectar, with its fine frost of summer, can soothe the soul of man with melody and brotherhood, so long will prohibition fail to prohibit. Many a man has died of thirst. Who ever died from mint juleps? For mint is the incarnation of nature's spirit of immortality, youth and poor Ponce De Leon, searching for the fountain of youth in Florida, trod its source beneath his feet.

"You may change the form of our government," said a Kentucky legislator, speaking on the commission form of city administration. "You may change our Constitution, but, sir, you cannot change the speed of our horses nor the quality of our mint." Nor here. The mint julep is a tradition of the people, a custom of the community. It is the perfection of concoction. Mint makes the world mellow.

ASQUITH ASSAILS LORDS.

Moves Consideration of Abolition of V. Need for Second Chamber.

London, March 29.—The House of Commons moved up into closer-range with House of Lords to-day, and a profound significant stage of the fight between the two houses was commenced.

The lower chamber held an excited debate when Premier Asquith rose to insist that the house go into committee of general elections had given the House Commons express authority to bring state of things to an end.

Briefly stated, Mr. Asquith's three motions provide that the lords shall have no part in financial legislation; that power over other legislation shall be only in compelling deliberations, but beyond the life of a single Parliament; that the term of Parliament shall be fixed to five years instead of seven years at present.

Mr. Asquith traced the course of evolution with the lords' interference with the budget measure in the last Parliament, and declared that the subsequent general elections had given the House Commons express authority to bring state of things to an end.

Premier Asquith said that he desired to see the predominance of the House of Commons in legislation. The government, he said, was the sheet-anchor of Great Britain's representative system.

A proper second chamber must be tended, he said, to be relatively small in numbers, must rest upon a democratic and hereditary base. It must be body by virtue of its composition and at the same time be governed by partisan temper against panic, but at the same time responsive to and dependent upon opinion and will of the nation.
